

KENTUCKY STRIKE RIOT

ONE DEAD, ONE FATALLY HURT
AND MANY WOUNDED.

Western Kentucky Coal Field the Scene of Bloody Fight, Lasting an Hour and a Half—More Than Two Thousand Shots Exchanged Between Union Men and Non-Union Mine Workers.

A dispatch from Madisonville, Ky., says: The Western Kentucky coal field was the scene of a pitched battle Sunday morning, which lasted an hour and a half, between a party of union miners and guards and nonunion miners at the mines of the Providence Coal company, 17 miles from here. One man was killed, one fatally hurt, and many injured. More than 2,000 shots were exchanged.

James H. Smith, a negro, was the man killed, and George Crouch, another striker, the man fatally hurt. How many wounded the attacking party had is not known, although the number must have been large. John West, Hut Dawson, and Nathan Bush, the nonunion miners also were injured.

The trouble began at 6 o'clock in the morning, when a party of about 75 armed men appeared on a hill about 400 yards from the slope mine of the coal company and began firing on the Tipples.

At the first fire the guards were aroused and immediately prepared to resist the attack. They were soon joined by many of the nonunion miners, and the fire of the attacking party was returned. The attacking party where, while the bullets were falling all around them.

RUHLIN DEFEATED.

Akron Giant Disabled by a Blow in Second Round.

At San Francisco, in one of the most unsatisfactory prize fights ever witnessed in this country, James J. Jeffries proved the victor over Gus Ruhlin, the Akron giant. In the fifth round of what was to have been a 20-round struggle Ruhlin wilted, and then he surrendered to his peer to the utter amazement and disgust of the assembled thousands. No one was more surprised at the outcome than Jeffries himself, who asserted that while he had delivered one telling blow in the second round he did not expect to win the victory so easily. Ruhlin's sole explanation of the outcome of the fight is that he received a chance blow which utterly disabled him and that Jeffries persisted in fighting him low.

Negro Question the Theme.

At Pittsburg, Pa., the greater part of the third day's session of the general missionary committee of the Methodist Episcopal church was devoted to appropriations, but the burning question came up late this afternoon when the "negro question" was precipitated by a motion of Bishop Foss when the application of the Alabama conferences for missionary aid came up. The bishop's motion was that the appropriations for white work in the South (Maryland and Delaware excepted) and colored work mostly in the south be referred to special committees for consideration. During the debate some of the speakers plainly intimated that the time was coming when the negro would have to retire from the Methodist church as a co-member with his white brother, and organize a branch of his own.
